

RMets Quarterly Journal: Celebrating 150 Years

Wednesday 13th September 2023
Imperial College, London

The Royal Meteorological Society is proud to be celebrating the 150th anniversary of the Quarterly Journal with a commemorative one day conference at Imperial College, London. The talks have been specifically chosen to reflect the best papers submitted in QJ over the years, including looking back over past progress, and forward to challenges of the future.

Speakers include:

Tim Woollings, Oxford University

Tony McNally, ECMWF

Brian Golding, Met Office

Joanna Haigh, Imperial College

Alan Blyth, Leeds University

Steeb Boeing, Leeds University

Mark Baldwin, Exeter University

Bablu Sinha, SOC

A panel session will be held to discuss all aspects of scientific publishing, including topics such as the future of scientific publishing; how best to publicise your research; open access and its funding, open vs closed reviews.

During the networking refreshments, delegates will have the opportunity to review posters presented by early-career scientists who have recently published in QJ.
